First invest in a good pair of camera and macro lenses that have a focal length of between 28mm and 80mm. These lenses are the most common lenses utilized for macro photography. You can also invest in a piece of diffusion also called cold or freezing lights. On the back of these lights is a sort of grid that channels cold light through to the session without heating up the room or causing any glare. Second, make sure that the black background used for the session is illuminated and extra base non-glare velveteen blankets. If possible, put the background down a few days before the session provides enough time for the lighting to set. Last, but not the least, make sure that your camera has a sufficient aperture to allow you to stop down to f/8 meaning the light is delivered into the sensor at its brightest. Aperture f/8 allows for focus on any tiny detail that might be hidden in plain sight. Be sure your camera is able to go to over f/1.8 for night and over f/2.8 for daytime. Low f/2.8 allows you to stop down to about the equivalent of f/11 for day and f/16 for night. 933d7f57e6
