What's New In FilePush?

FilePush is a Windows application designed to synchronize workstations across your network. When you select the check box and click the send button, FilePush will send a specified file or folder to other computers that have FilePush installed. This helps speed up your work, saves time and energy as you are no longer limited to constantly hitting the "refresh" button on your browser or "re-send" button in your email client. When you send a file or folder, FilePush saves it in a temporary folder in the same location as the one where the file or folder was sent from. The application checks for updates when you start up. The number of files you can send is limited by the amount of space available on the server on which FilePush is installed. FilePush is configured through the Configuration Dialog. The Configuration Dialog contains:

1. General settings including the server name, protocol and port.
2. Network settings such as the destination server name and port, username and password.
3. Log Settings where you can specify a filename and format for the log files.

IMPORTANT NOTE: FilePush is a third-party software. The author is not responsible for any data loss caused by using FilePush.

FilePush Version 2.5 FilePush will save the file or folder to the server specified on the configuration page. However, if the file or folder has already been received, it will not be overwritten. If a file has not been received, or if the connection to the server is lost, the file or folder will not be received. To resend a file or folder, it must be deleted from the temporary folder, and then sent again. The configuration page contains a checkbox "Automatically check for updates" to notify you when new version of FilePush is available. Once you have acknowledged this notification you will be notified when the new version is available. This file is provided for evaluation only.
