Desktop Magic Tree is a small desktop enhancement application whose purpose is to help you place an animated Christmas tree on your screen. It can be deployed on all Windows versions out there. Take advantage of its portable status You can store the utility on pen drives or other similar devices so you can carry it with you all the time. Plus, you may run it without having to possess administrative privileges. You may also open it directly from the storage device. Double-clicking on the executable file helps you gain access to the tool's GUI because you do not have to go through an installation process. You can get rid of it with a simple deletion task because it does not write entries to your Windows registry and generate additional setup items on the host PC. Animated design Desktop Magic Tree reveals a clean and simple layout that shows a Christmas tree decorated with garlands, globes, and presents. You are allowed to move the animated tree to the preferred desktop position. You can check out the available configuration settings by right-clicking on the tree. The dedicated parameters look easy to work with so you are not going to spend a lot of time setting them up. A few configuration settings Desktop Magic Tree gives you the possibility to adjust the transparency of the Christmas tree by choosing between several preset values from a drop-down list, make the tree visible by keeping it on top of other windows, place multiple trees on your screen at the same time, as well as run the program at Windows startup. A new form of carbon allotropes has been found, and this discovery might pave the way for a more cost-effective, high-energy-density battery. In a recent study published in Scientific Reports, University of Illinois scientists found a new form of carbon allotropes, called graphene oxide (GO). GO is the product of oxidizing graphene, a one-atom-thick sheet of carbon atoms. "Despite the fact that graphene is the lightest material in the world, its commercial viability is hampered by its limited abundance and high cost of production,
